At Gila Bend a number of the party, including himself, Lieut. Gully, who served with Gen. Price in the Mexican war, and a man named Richardson, stopped at the Pima villages for the purpose of building a boat, in which they intended to float down the Gila to its confluence with the Colorado. This plan was consummated, and in due course of time they reached Yuma, where they remained for some time resting up. The Colorado Indians were hostile at that time and a constant look-out on either side of the river was the only means of securing safety in travel.

The Territorial Exposition at the Phoenix Park is the most remarkable of all the great expositions of the world. The attendance at the exposition is far greater than any similar event in the history of the world.
